Discourse Patchwork

Ehsaneh Mehri¹ and Mansour Koosha²

1: Department of Foreign Languages, Islamic Azad University, Khorasgan Branch, Isfahan, Iran
   ehsaneh_m@yahoo.com
2: Department of Foreign Languages, Islamic Azad University, Khorasgan Branch, Isfahan, Iran
   mansour.koosha@yahoo.com

Regarding “translation as the active movement by which discourse may be extended from one cultural setting to another” (Pym, 1991); here presented twenty pieces of discourse in the process of translation to show how “translation could become a discovery procedure of some importance to intercultural discourse analysis” (Pym, 1991).